HISTORY HIGHLIGHTS of the GEORGIA DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

There is no evidence that the Cherokee Indians of Georgia ever had any agreement among their several groups which could be called the beginning of the Georgia Department of Labor.

When General James Edward Oglethorpe settled at Savannah in February, 1733, he brought with him several plans for industry in the new colony of Georgia. Since insufficient labor was available to assure the success of these plans, the importation of slaves was permitted under certain conditions in 1749.

Georgia became a royal province in 1753 when the Charter of the Colonizing Trustees expired. The new regime flourished so much that Sir James Wright, the last of the royal governors, said that Georgia was "the most flourishing colony on the continent." Here we see that the renowned industry and devotion to duty of Georgia workers had an early beginning.

Georgia's first legislature in the newly formed nation met in Savannah on January 1, 1755. Evidently labor laws were not discussed by this legislature.

The first appearance of labor laws seems to have come in 1853 when "an act to settle and fix the hours of labor by all white persons under 21 years of age, in all cotton, woolen, and other manufacturing establishments in the State . . ." was passed. The act provides "the hours for labor for all white persons under 21 years of age in all cotton, woolen, or other manufacturing establishments in this State, shall be, and the same are hereby settled and fixed at and from sun-rise until sun-set." The enforcement of this act was evidently left to the general police powers and authorities of the State.

An act of 1906 provided that no child under 10 years of age should be employed or allowed to labor in or about any factory under any circumstances.

The first reference to a Department of Labor came in the Governor's message to the General Assembly on July 1, 1909: "The industrial growth of our State and increasing number of skilled and unskilled workmen in our population demand that the State keep pace with the progress of the times, and establish a Department of Labor . . . The Commissioner of Labor should be charged with the enforcement of all laws affecting labor. I am proud of the fact that our State has kept abreast of the times in the matter of child-labor legislation and am sure that all laws will be strengthened as soon as necessity and industrial conditions warrant. The Commissioner of Labor should be specifically charged with the enforcement of child-labor laws . . . (and) to compile statistics showing labor conditions throughout the State, and furnish the same to industrial institutions who desire such information. Since the State is so well favored by both labor and climatic conditions, authentic information would doubtless prove very valuable, as it might mean the establishment of many other enterprises in the State . . . It should also be the duty of the Commissioner of Labor . . . to act as mediator in the disputes between capital and labor . . ." In 1911 the General Assembly acted on the Governor's recommendation, created the Department of Commerce and Labor, headed by the Commissioner of Commerce and Labor.

The first Commissioner, who was elected by the people, reported on June 12, 1912: "The work of organizing the Department began January 25 . . . the rooms assigned to the Department were unfurnished and some time elapsed before anything could be done in the way of securing the furniture, stationery, and printing needed. Having no precedent to follow, the work of organizing the Department was necessarily slow."

The act of 1906 concerning child labor was amended in 1914 to prohibit the employment of children under 14 years of age.

Factory inspectors were provided in 1916 and in 1920 an Employers' Liability Act provided for compensation for industrial accidents. That same year, another act provided for rehabilitation of workers disabled in industry or otherwise. In 1931 the Department of Industrial Relations was established and put under the control and management of three directors, the chairman being the Commissioner of Commerce and Labor.

The acts of 1937 established the Georgia Department of Labor and abolished "the Department of Industrial Relations and all offices therein." This act provided that the Commissioner of Labor would be elected by the people at the next general election; the Commissioner to serve in the interim was appointed by the governor. This act was approved March 25, 1937.

An act of March 29, 1937, provided for a Bureau of Unemployment Compensation, divided into an Employment Service division and an Unemployment Compensation division, with personnel appointed by the Commissioner of Labor. The act of March 25, 1937, providing for an Industrial Board was repealed in February, 1943, abolished the Board and created a State Board of Workmen's Compensation. This act of 1943 gave the Commissioner of Labor an advisory capacity to the Board. The acts of 1941 increased the term of office of the Commissioner of Labor from two years to four years.

The act of March 8, 1945, changed the name of the Bureau of Unemployment Compensation to the Employment Security Agency.

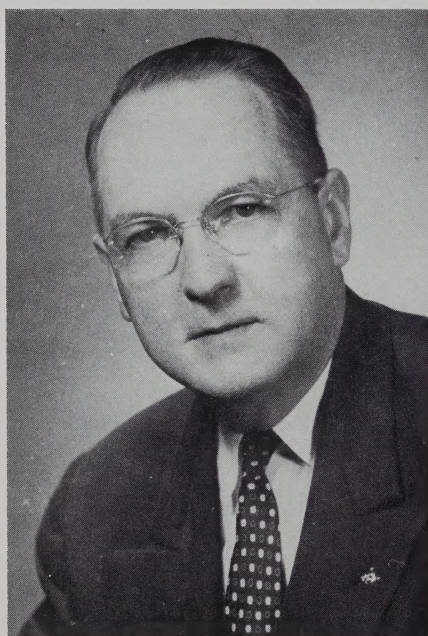

For a period during World War II (January 1, 1942, to November 15, 1946) the Employment Service became a part of the United States Employment Service and was administratively under the control of the federal government.

From time to time, the General Assembly has kept the Employment Security Law in step with the State's expanding industrial economy.
